Fall Workshop

Adam Jahiel's Willow Creek Ranch at the Hole-in-the-Wall fall Photography Workshop

September 20-26, near Kaycee, Wyoming. Limited to 8 people.

The goal of this workshop is for people to learn and grow as photographers, and have the luxury of five days to learn, think, share, and experiment. I encourage people to push past their existing comfort zones. We have a modern meeting room, with a large, flat screen TV, and a digital projector system, and snacks. Plug in your laptop, and leave it there all week. The room is always accessible. Typically, the cowboys wrangle horses early in the morning, eat breakfast, saddle up and head off to work in some of the most beautiful landscape you have ever seen. Between shooting opportunities, we meet, look at photos, share ideas, ask questions, and learn new things.

Jahiel in LensWork Extended #119 Querencia

"I wanted to see as much of Cuba as I could and knew that it wouldn't be possible to get an in-depth look at the country and its people in such a short period of time; that would have been unrealistic and frustrating. Instead, I did what I always do, I walked and wandered, sat and observed, and had wonderful conversations with people, often without speaking a word."
