Portraits of Resilience

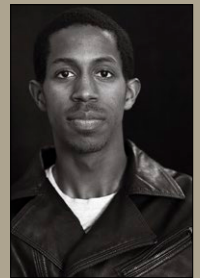

In the spring of 2015, the MIT community experienced a terrible spate of suicides. Daniel Jackson, a professor of computer science and an accomplished photographer, set out to meet students, faculty and staff who were suffering from depression and anxiety and to make their portraits. The gallery of portraits, he hoped, would be a source of reassurance to others who were suffering, and would go beyond destigmatization to celebrating the resilience of those who face these challenges.

The book includes 43 full page duotone images, complementing the portraits with stunning views of MIT's architectural landmarks.

Jackson in LensWork Extended #70 The Stata Center

Here at LensWork we've long been advocates of photographing close to home, where one can have a more intimate relationship with one's subject matter. Daniel Jackson has done just that in this portfolio of the building in which he works – the Stata Center, designed by Frank Gehry and completed in 2004. Two of the photographs were made from his office window!
