Phoenix, Arizona photographer, Luc Busquin, notes, "The upper edge of the troposphere offers an almost ideal vantage point to observe our civilization's transformation of the Earth. With a nod to Antoine de Saint-Exupéry, this series of aerials explores the spectrum of large-scale alterations of the land. As human population relentlessly grows, only the most arid and rugged terrains appear to be awaiting Mankind's new design."

Busquin in LensWork and LensWork Extended #129 *Atop the Troposphere

From atop the troposphere man's largest efforts are overshadowed by nature's grand scale. The great cities, with their enormous populations, shrink from sight. The view from atop the troposphere allows me to share a unique look at our planet, and to a degree, humanity.
