New YouTube Channel

I've recently started to film my landscape photography trips in order to share the experience of being out in the field. I present these videos on YouTube so viewers can see where I go, how I get there and what it takes to create the images I capture. You see the good and the bad, challenges and successes; a real behind the scenes look at landscape photography.

The current set of videos follow me on a recent winter trip to Death Valley and Zion. Many more adventures to come. Please subscribe and follow along!

Passageways of Fort Pickens

One of the primary aspects I enjoy about landscape photography is the opportunity for exploration: narrow canyons, forest paths, and remote roadways spark my imagination. I found that Fort Pickens' twisting passageways and changing light can be compared to the sandstone canyons that I love so much in the Desert Southwest, and the long hallways provide side trails not unlike the forest.
